Communication in Uganda has improved greatly nowadays. Gone are the days when different communities used drums, whistles, horns and bells as means of communication. These means were traditional and people encountered numerous challenges while using them to communicate.

Imagine a person blowing a horn to inform people about an incident. It would take them a lot of time to respond and help people in need. This was very unfortunate. Thanks to the inventors of modern means of communication like; radios, televisions and the telephone.

Of all the above, the telephone is the most preferred. Most people in Uganda communicate using mobile phones nowadays. Due to this, everyone can communicate to others from everywhere and at any time. It is a matter of loading airtime and dialing the number of their choice.

Telephones have also eased business transactions since they have a provision for mobile money. This has enabled most business owners to send and receive money easily hence saving time and money.

In addition, most phones enable their users to access the internet. This internet has helped students like me to make research and excel in my studies. I can now use the search engines like google chrome and opera mini to access all the information I want if I have data bundles in my phone.

How ignorant we would be without these modern means of communication!

A disciplined child is none
But the one who values education
Spares time to revise books
Pays attention to teachers
Talks carefully and politely.

A disciplined child is so special
Ever helping parents with chores at home
Does class work at school
Stays away from bad company
And inspires everyone around them.

A disciplined child is cherished
Everytime and everywhere
Cares for his or her property
Respects people's property
And is treasured by everyone.

A disciplined child is the one
Who knows when to say sorry
And when to say thank you
Fears God and respects elders and fellows
He/she is every parent's prayer.
