TURN OVER

ITEM 1

SCENARIO

In recent months, a regional newspaper in East Africa ran a series of stories highlighting how some countries have achieved tremendous economic progress, while others in the same region continue to lag behind in terms of health care, infrastructure, and education access. Public interest has grown, with readers writing in, asking why such development gaps exist and what could be done to bridge them.

You have been asked to represent the general public in statement repression.

TASK

Write an article for this newspaper to contribute to this ongoing discussion.(25 Scores)

ITEM 2

SCENARIO

A youth organization in your district is hosting a continental dialogue for students from both developed and developing countries. Many students from high-income countries have expressed surprise at the challenges faced by youth in less developed countries regarding education, employment, and access to technology. You are one of the educated elites from the less developed countries and you interacted with the students from high-income countries on the issue they expressed.

TASK

Write a speech that you will present at the dialogue, addressing the concerns raised and sharing perspectives from your region.(25 Scores)

ITEM 3

SCENARIO

A documentary aired on a local TV station showing how a region in your country recently shifted from traditional subsistence farming to commercialized and mechanized agriculture. While productivity has improved, there has been mixed reaction among local farmers and communities.

You are one of the trustworthy members of the community for so long as far as agriculture is concerned.

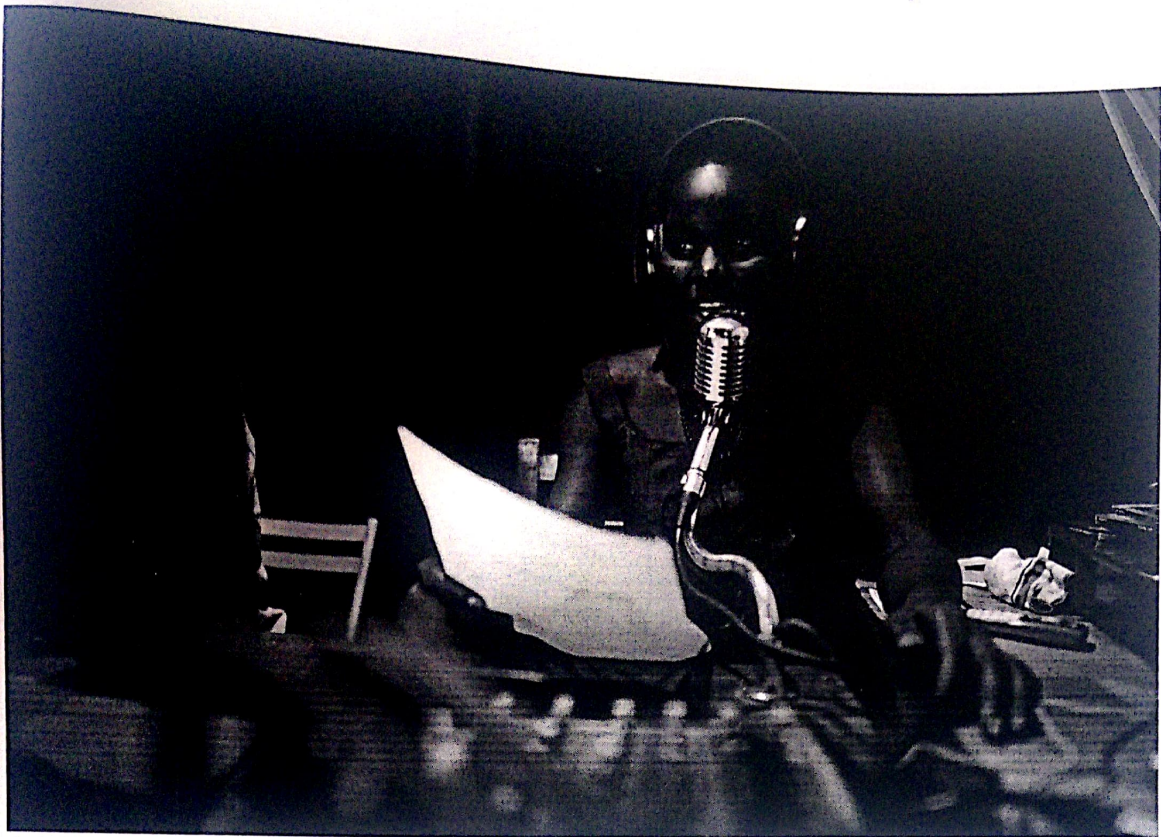

TASK

Prepare a policy brief to be submitted to your district agriculture officer reflecting on the changes and proposing a way forward.(25 Scores)

ITEM 4

SCENARIO

A local radio talk show hosted a discussion titled "Our Growing Numbers – A Blessing or a Burden?" Callers had conflicting views about the impact of population growth on employment, urbanization, and service delivery. The show's host now wants to feature different youth opinions in an upcoming program. You are among the community members and you have been observing this move.

TASK

Write a letter to the show's host expressing your perspective on the issue and linking it to your experience or observations in your community.(25 Scores)
